

Group Portion

Names:

Angel Fernandez

Alan Waldo

Timmy Luong

Jared Lomeli

Luke Wedlock

Notes:

1. Discuss the semiotics, signifiers (what you see)/signifieds (what you interpret).
See graphic above for guidelines.
- We see that the company is trying to make their brand seem more organic by the use of real tomatoes in the ad.
 - Tomatoes may signify natural/non manufacturer
 - By the use of shiny colors and textures, they are trying to say the product is fresh new, and sleek
 - Looking at the slogan, the brand is trying to signify that they are the best and the biggest company/well-known that manufacturer ketchup and other condiment

2. Identify the ad's rhetorical appeals— logical (logos), emotional (pathos), and ethical (ethos). Be sure to provide concrete details.

- Logos- Good quality tomatoes create healthy / good quality Ketchup. The product is only fresh tomatoes (no artificial / preservatives) → tagline and image
- Ethos- they are well trusted with the general audience as they are one of the most known manufacturers of producing condiments. They are overall trustworthy
- Pretty well-known for making these types of products, making them promoting it more credible as they have done similar things to this already, resulting trustworthiness

3. Identify the ad's rhetorical situation— audience (be as specific as possible), purpose (what is the ad trying to do/convey?), context (what circumstances exist in the environment/era of this ad?).

- Audience that likes authentic food (health-conscious consumers). Don't like lots of chemicals and artificial things in their food. Audience is more towards chefs or people who like to cook
- The purpose of this is to further establish a credibility that they are the overall best manufacturer of ketchups.
- The context needed to understand this advertisement is the credibility of Heinz. In the modern food market, most products are made using artificial colors, flavors, preservatives, etc. Heinz keeps their products organic/authentic

4. Discuss the ad's effectivity. Does the ad succeed in driving home its message? What is your opinion of this ad's strategy in conveying a message? Are you swayed?

- The ad is effective as it seems that they managed to get the message across to the audience. Another way that the ad is effective is managing to get the message across with simplicity, by providing simple colors, and graphics.
- It could also be throwing some shade towards similar companies who products similar products

Group Analysis:(word count - 273)

In the ad the company effectively convinces the audience of the authenticity that their ketchup is made from organic tomatoes. By giving a simplistic image that the brand does not involve and condone the use of artificial ingredients, unlike other brands.

The ad introduces some signifiers, which includes the bottle made out of fresh tomatoes and the bright bold red background. Additionally, on the bottom of the advertisement, a tagline states how their company produces their product the best compared to other companies. Through these signifiers, the company appeals to logos by showing that they produce good quality tomatoes that have no preservatives or added ingredients. On top of this, the ad also appeals to ethos because they are a well-known company, demonstrating trust and credibility. This is because they are known for producing high quality products in the past. This attracts chefs and those who enjoy cooking with these condiments in their daily life to enhance the flavor of bland foods.

In conclusion, Heinz accomplishes the purpose of assuring the audience that their product doesn't partake in adding chemicals, by using unique and bold colors to accomplish this message. The ad also is effective in calling out some of their competitors, as they state they are the only company that takes natural ingredients to make their product. As a group, we are more swayed to buy a Heinz product than others as the company establishes their credibility in our lives as they are a well-known company to the public. In our opinion, the Heinz Company established a clear and easy to understand message and delivers this message to anyone that sees this.

Individual Portion

